Q: How to create a new post for a specified user I want to make a list of the posts of a specified user by either going to their profile or clicking a button in one of my views. I want to store the posts in the list so I can then reference them later. A: A simple Way to get a list of posts is (within the context of a new action) as follows... global $wpdb; $posts = $wpdb->get_results('SELECT * FROM '.$wpdb->posts.' WHERE post_author='.$user_id, ARRAY_A); print_r($posts); This will work, however, it's not ideal. The above function will give you all the posts that a user has posted, as it fetches all the posts that are tagged or that are in the author's favourites. A better way to achieve what you want is to use the role capabilities available in WordPress. This will give you a much better overview of what the logged in user's capabilities are, and what they are allowed to access. When a user logs in, the profile isn't sent as a cookie, instead a session is created... if (isset($_SESSION['user']['user_login'])) update_user_meta($_SESSION['user']['ID'], 'logged_in', 1); From this session, the profile of the user can be retrieved by accessing the current user session via $GLOBALS['current_user'] This method is the most reliable, as everything will happen within one request/action.
